Louis the Frog and the Wishing Ruby

One jumpy day after school Louis the frog was walking home to his room. Louis the frog took a look. Tip-toe, tip-toe. Louis said "Who are you?" The ground started to open; air was going to his face. Bang! Louis hurt his head. Flowers bloomed, birds began to sing. A secret passage began to open. Louis stepped through the door. He got to the woods. The sun sparkled through the trees. His ruby had been stolen.

Suddenly he saw two horrible creatures. The monsters had four eyes, three horns and were very hairy. The second monster had two horns and even more fur. Louis said "Please can I go through the tunnel." The monsters ran after Louis. The knight found him. The knight took him to the queen. The black queen was locked in the dungeon. In the dungeons was a dragon ... please. The dragon gave him a key. Louis unlocked himself. The dragon didn't hurt him. Louis ran as fast as his flippers could take him. He thought about his ruby. I must get there.

He ran through the long grass. Then he ran through the jungle. After many days he got to the caves. A mouldy letter said to pick two caves. So he got into one of them. It was wrong one. The cave on the second go had the jewel in it. He got it! There was an evil king fisher who stole the ruby. Eventually Louis got home. He went to the police station. Then he got home and saw his parents.
